FAQ for the Joseph Cipfl Research Grant Application

1. If, during the process of research or preparing the workshop, it seems that there is a need for new methodology, personnel or supply, can the fund be used other than specified in the proposal?

A: Yes. It is understood that research is an exploration of an unknown path. Creative work is done when chances present themselves. It is reasonable to want to examine an additional museum archive which the previous research points to, or to perform another experiment which the previous results indicate.

2. Can students be employed by the grant?

A: It has to be cleared by relevant agencies to prevent conflicts such as “double dipping” of school-based scholarship funds, for example.

3. Can the stipend be used to supplement summer income in addition to the nine-month salary?

A: Yes.

4. Will multiple applications from the same college, or recipients from the same college in the past decrease the chance to get funded?

A: The applications are considered on merit alone. In other words, applicants are competing with peers who applied, unrelated to applicant’s college or funding history.

5. How many applications do you typically receive?

A: About 15.

6. If not funded, will there be explanation as to how to improve the project?

A: Due to time constraints, we are unable to offer an explanation.

7. Can institutions other than community colleges be partners in the project and be funded?

A: The grant recipients must be Illinois community college faculty members or jointly received by faculty with administrator, Librarian, counselor or technology support personnel.

8. Are publication fees allowed?

A: Publications fees for peer reviewed journals are good use of the grant. However, research or workshop grant funds may not be used for publication of a book.

9. Can one apply multiple times?

A: Yes. But we try to fund diverse people and colleges.
